What do you like most about the neighborhood?

From an architectural perspective, I like how the scale of the buildings in this neighborhood differs from most other rowhouse neighborhoods in Philadelphia. The historic industrial buildings and infrastructure and pedestrian-scaled streets are great urban assets. I also like how the neighborhood still feels undefined, like anything is possible.

What do you think needs improvement in the neighborhood?

On the surface level, the issues of trash and homelessness appear to be the most pressing. Additionally, I think the neighborhood would benefit from increased interest and pedestrian activity. The city is experiencing somewhat of an urban renaissance, yet Callowhill gets very little coverage (other than the Rail Park). I think more events like the Pearl Street Passage and the Night Market would bring other Philadelphians to our neighborhood, though we also need permanent businesses and development.

Tell us a little about yourself—how long have you lived in the neighborhood and why would you make a good board member:

I moved to Callowhill in August 2014, though I've lived in Philadelphia for almost 8 years. I'm a registered architect with a strong passion for urbanism and cities. As our neighborhood will surely see changes over the next few years, I think I can offer a unique perspective to help shape those changes. As a homeowner in the neighborhood and ardent cheerleader for Philadelphia, I want to see Callowhill thrive.
