What do you like most about the neighborhood?

I love that this neighborhood is so closely connected to Center City and many other neighborhoods but has a unique footprint. I have resided in a few different neighborhoods in Philadelphia at different stages of development. I find it exciting to be a part of a changing urban landscape that has so many exciting projects going on like our Cultural Mapping Project, so much public art, and the Rail Park. I have become closely connected to the diverse communities that call this place home and love that we can play a part in connecting them.

What do you think needs improvement in the neighborhood?

An area that I would enjoy working on is a partnership with the catchment public elementary school. I am a parent of a public school student and this is an area of particular interest to me personally. We also have a Youth Arts Workshop at Asian Arts Initiative which might eventually be a partner of the neighborhood school.

I also feel that with the increased residential and commercial development in the neighborhood we need to make holistic decisions regarding new project proposals. By that I mean we should carefully weigh our input and where possible call for projects that add aesthetic, community, and inclusive value to the neighborhood.

Tell us a little about yourself—how long have you lived in the neighborhood and what would make you a good board member:

I am a Philadelphia resident for about 10 years in this stretch and about 15 years total. I currently live in Graduate Hospital but work for Asian Arts Initiative as the Development Director. I am a parent of 3 children one who is in Public School. I am an active member of both Callowhill and my own neighborhood. I am a good connector and have my hands plugged into many community projects.
